

What are your core values and beliefs?

Ans: How a person reacts or conducts with others comes from his/her values. If I were to tell my values, I am a calm person, I respect others and seniors and try to obey seniors' instructions, I like team work and take decisions based on major opinion, I like to present my opinion but don't try to establish my opinion because I am not confident in my personal opinion and decision. Actually, I cannot make decisions easily. I find it too hard to make a decision. Sometimes my decision is affected by other opinions, but my one decision to be a web-developer is very strict to me. I believe that one day I will be a skilled web-developer. I know I am a lazy person but it's my dream. I am a goal-oriented person; I can work for my goal. Without pressure, I can't work, but I am trying to be a hardworking and punctual. I hope this school will train me to be a punctual and hardworker. I have realised nothing is possible without regularity and punctuality. Now I like to take pressure; I believe in myself.

What are your goals and aspirations?

Ans: My goal now is to become a skilled web developer and an expert in JavaScript. JavaScript is my first programming language, and I enjoy working with it. Additionally, my aspiration is to be hired to not only enhance my skills but also contribute to supporting my family.

What are the first steps you will take to build your personal brand?

Ans: My first step to make a personal branding is to use all kinds of social media like a professional person and share my skill and I have to share what I am interested in, what I am learning, what is my future goal and inspire others to do it and I have to express the way how others can be like me.

How does personal branding differ from self-promotion, and why is this distinction important?

Ans: From my thinking, I think that self-branding means to express the skill of the person and self-promotion means to try to express a project or achievement, not skill. If I give a real example, it will be when I am presenting my skill to resume, it's self-branding, and when I am presenting my project and what I did in my past, it's self-promotion. Self-branding is a professional identity. A self-branded person is known for his skill and profession. A bad person is unable to create a personal brand because personal branding stands on the person's honesty and reflection of his activities. Distinction is very important because personal branding gains reputation and its long-term good effect brings to their brand, but self-promotion is not long-term. Skill life long needs to survive. But the project and achievement is short-term.

What are you most proud of?

Ans: Now, I am proud because I have started to understand what web design and development actually entail. Six months ago, I was mistaken when I thought that only HTML and CSS were enough for web design and that it was an easy path to becoming a web developer. Now, when I compare what I know with what I knew back then, it's a huge achievement in six months. However, when I think about how much I truly know about web design and development, it feels like a drop in the ocean. I am not proud that I know web design and development, but I am proud that I have started to understand what web design is. I hope this understanding will eventually make me a skilled web developer.
